

A LEVEL ENGLISH LITERATURE
(Edexcel Pearson specification)

Studying A Level English Literature offers students the opportunity to read, discuss and analyse literary texts from all genres and many of the major periods of writing in English. This is an academic and literate qualification that is highly valued by universities and would particularly suit students wishing to study all forms of English, humanities subjects or law at degree level.

Students are expected to have achieved at least a grade 5 in both GCSE English Literature and English Language.

YEAR ONE

Students will study four literary texts (please see overleaf) which make up part of all 3 A Level components.

Component 1: Drama

For this unit students will study a non-Shakespeare tragedy, which will require an understanding of the genre and context, as well as the play itself. This is an open book exam.

Component 2: Prose

For this unit, students will study 2 novels from a connected genre (see overleaf). This is an open book examination. Students will practise writing comparative essays on a range of titles.

Component 3: Poetry

In this unit, students will study the named poems from the 21st Century anthology, and a range of modern unseen poetry for comparison. This is an open book examination. There will be one comparative essay question on a named poem from their studied collection, which will need to be compared to an unseen modern poem.

YEAR TWO

There will be 20% coursework in the A Level. Students will study another four literary texts (please see overleaf). Eight in total across the 2 year course.

Component 1: Drama – 30% of the A Level – 2 ¼ hour examination

This is an open book examination. Students will study one Shakespeare tragedy and the tragedy covered in Component 1 of the lower 6th. They will write one essay on each text. They will also study an anthology of critical essays on Shakespearean tragedy.

Component 2: Prose – 20% of the A Level – 1 hour examination

This is an open book examination. Students will be examined on the two prose texts studied in the lower 6th. Students will be required to write one comparative essay.

In addition to the selection of post-2000 poems studied in the lower 6th, students will experience more unseen poetry and a range of poetry from either a literary period or a named poet from that period (please see overleaf). In Section A they will write one essay comparing an unseen poem with a named poem from the collection studied. In Section B they will write one essay on the poetry set text.
